

More photos of Corowa area

By stanford - Posted on 03 October 2011

We did more exploring today, as I start work again tomorrow and Dad goes back to Melbourne on Wednesday. We looked at a number of places along the disused Culcairn - Corowa railway. Here are a few photos, in the order they would be encountered if travelling from Corowa to Culcairn...

First stop, Brocklesby:

Above: Brocklesby platform

Above: Platform and silos

Above: Silos

Above: Silo road vehicle unloading shed

Above: Silo shed

Above: Silo platform

Next stop, Walla Walla

Above: Silos, track and shed

Above: Silo loading mechanisms

Then, Culcairn

Above: Station building

Above: Looking north from footbridge towards Wagga Wagga

Above: Switch stand and levers

Above: Footbridge, looking south towards Albury

Above: Signalling circuitry shed (I think!)

Above: Disused platform. This platform is similar to the one at the Brocklesby silo platform, and is higher than a NSW passenger platform

While at Culcairn, two trains rumbled through...

Above: Northbound Countrylink XPT. This is the rear power car in the train, not the leading one!

Above: Southbound PN steel train

In one of the tourist booklets it mentioned an old railway trestle bridge located near Burrumbuttock (between Brocklesby and Walla Walla), but I wasn't able to find it, so alas no photo. There is also a town called Balldale which the railway ran through, which we didnt visit. Maybe we will visit them another day.