

Corowa town railway features

By stanford - Posted on 05 October 2011

After work today, I went for a bike ride along the rail trail that goes from the old station a few kilometres north. Along the way there was a number of old railway features worth taking photos of, so here is a selection of them.

First, a few photos of the old Corowa Flour Mill, which was once served by the railway. Today it is a chocolate factory.

Above: Overall view of railway side of building, showing the loading dock and other features.

Above: Unloading grate? I am not sure what this is, but it seems to be some way of unloading cars by gravity.

Above: Brick building and corrugated iron building. I don't know whether the silos behind the brick building was served by the railway.

Between the Flour Mill and the station...

Above: Signal.

North of the Flour Mill there are a few railroad formations still in existence...

Above: Near the end of the rail trail, the rail trail veers away from the railway formation, and the tracks are exposed.

Above: Rail still in place near the end of the rail trail.

As of Oct 2011, the rails remain intact for some distance from the end of the rail trail but are not usable by trains - trees have grown between the rails, the rail foundations have subsided.
